Companies operating in areas where Unexploded Ordnance (UXO) or other energetic materials can be discovered have a responsibility under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 to reduce risk to their employees and others. This can be achieved by offering appropriate training, either as awareness or more in depth. A good example of this is the Crown Estates Guidance Note (June 2006) – Dealing with munitions in marine aggregates, which recommends specific training to personnel on site.

We run regular courses and can also create accredited courses to your bespoke needs. Call our sales team for further information. (Please note that our EOD and IEDD training packages can only be delivered to serving police or military personnel)
